

What is the Creating Inclusive Communities Project?

- It's a celebration of the experiences and perspectives that make higher education professionals unique — and uniquely human.
- It's a resource for initiating conversations about diversity and inclusion.
- It's a call to action, urging all of us to strive to create more inclusive campus communities.

A Creating Inclusive Community session provides an opportunity for learners to view personal stories and perspectives on diversity from professionals in higher education. Using a facilitated discussion model, learner are encouraged to use those stories as a basis to discuss what diversity looks like at their institution. These dialog sessions provide a unique opportunity for participants to actively think about and share with others. The overall objective is to acknowledge and embrace the diversity of the wonderful, eclectic individuals that make up our campus communities.

To learn more about the Creating Inclusive Communities project visit the CUPA-HR website at: <http://diversity.cupahr.org/>. Stories, videos, and resources materials are all available at this site.

Notes

*Note: CUPA-HR membership login is not required to access these resources